

God's Not Dead by Darren Sutton

The book “God’s Not Dead: What do you Believe?” by Darren Sutton is about courageous kid a named Josh Wheaton who stands up for what he believes in against his professor. Josh takes a huge risk failing his class if he cannot persuade all the students in philosophy class in what he believes in is true.

I very much enjoyed this book. I rate this book a 5 star. I rate this book very highly because It gave me a wonderful new outlook of the world and to life. I recommend this book to anyone who is a believer, but to those who are too afraid to heavily believe. Also to the people that say they believe but feel worshipping is too much to ask for. I decided to read this book because of the genre. I was told books written in these genres can change the way someone can feel or see life as how it is. So, I decided to give it a chance.

What responded to me the most as I read this book is the main character Josh Wheaton. He feels trapped in the feud between himself and his professor. Josh can easily take an easy way out and not risk failing his class. Say God is Dead and act if nothing has ever happened. But he sees that he has been given a mission to stand up on what he believes in. I can relate with Josh because there have been many moments in my life where I was afraid to show how much I believe. But, Josh has made me see how much standing up in what you believe in is

I was very surprised that I liked this book. I was more surprised how much it impacted me and how different I am now as a man. I am not afraid to talk about what I believe in now. I put myself in Josh Wheaton’s shoes when I ever want to talk about what I believe in to someone else I consider this must be one of the best books I ever read. There has never been a book that made me feel different.
